County up to 21 COVID cases as officials eye return to business

BY COLLIN OVERTON

Jefferson County is up to 21 cases of the COVID-19 coronavirus as state and local officials eye what a return to normalcy would look like over the coming weeks.

Officials held their eighth briefing Tuesday and previewed the ways restrictions could be loosened following Gov. Eric Holcomb's latest executive order, which extends the stay-at-home order to May 1 but allows certain healthcare procedures to resume. The Indiana Department of Health announced on Tuesday and Wednesday announced a combined 795 cases (431 Tuesday and 394 Wednesday) and 92 new deaths (61 Tuesday and 31 Wednesday) , bringing the state's total to 12,438 positive cases and 661 deaths.

Indiana health officials have said Tuesday's numbers were lower than previous days due to a technological error, so cases from that day will be refined throughout the week. State Health Commissioner Kris Box said Indiana may see the death toll rise later this week because the state will start including presumptive deaths, in which there was no documented positive test for the virus, in its overall total.

Jefferson County is averaging just less than one new case per day, having reported its first case on March 30.

Filling in for Madison Mayor Bob Courtney, Chief of Staff Mindy McGee delivered a report mentioning the new order and highlighted the fact that it allows certain additional healthcare activities to resume, including elective surgeries, dental procedures and pet grooming. All other healthcare activities will be reevaluated effective April 26 and the state will reevaluate the medical provision in the order every seven days, she said.

City gets, gives virus update to Sen. Pence

Council OKs amendments to road transfer

BY MARK CAMPBELL

Madison City Council took the first official action toward amending the city's road transfer agreement to take over a 4.5-mile portion of State Road 56 that includes three bridges, several culverts and all of Main Street and spent time with U.S. Sen. Greg Pence sharing insights and ideas on the COVID-19 crisis at Tuesday's regular meeting.

The council, meeting over Zoom due to state virus mandates, agreed with Pence that while health and safety of citizens is foremost in the COVID crisis, growing economic concerns are an issue that must be addressed, too. And while federal, state and local money are helping those impacted by the virus to survive so far, having communities go back to work is the only viable solution to the financial difficulties many Americans are facing.

"Getting the economy back open in a safe manner is the solution," Pence said, speaking from his home in Columbus by teleconferencing. "There's not enough money in the world to just keep throwing at keeping everyone home. There just isn't.

"We just added $4 trillion to our deficit — our deficit was only $22 trillion — and there's many many people who thought that was too much. This is circumstance that warrants addressing the health and safety of the problem here. That goes without saying," Pence added. "We need to take the money we have and do that but once we get it as controlled as best we can, I'm the person that's saying let's figure out a solution here. And I think all of my peers are talking about that, too, because there can't be a Republican or Democrat in Congress that isn't hearing the same thing you all are telling me right now. That's all we've heard for weeks."

COVID crisis could put squeeze on Trimble budget

BY COLLIN OVERTON

With COVID-19-related shutdowns affecting nearly every aspect of the economy, Trimble County officials are already expecting to make changes to next year's budget.

Monday was the first reading of the new budget and tax rates for 2020-2021 at a Trimble County Fiscal Court meeting held over the web conferencing app Zoom. Judge Executive Todd Pollock said he had planned a 3% wage increase for county employees next year, but that was in limbo due to an expected drop in revenues across the board.

"There's a lot that's going to be up in the air with our revenue, I think, in the coming year," Pollock said.

Giving the example of road aid money funded by an insurance premium tax, Pollock said the county budgeted $1 million for that, but will probably have to be make adjustments before the second reading.

Officials are also unsure when they will even get property tax money, since the state pushed the filing deadline from May 15 to June 15 in light of the shutdowns, Magistrate J.D. Jones said.

"I'd be more worried about what we take in and out of the landfill, if businesses don't come back after this pandemic's over with, and there's not going to be that much trash — that's what I'm worried about," Magistrate Chris Liter added.

Trimble County's budget for next year so far has budgeted revenues and expenses including: $3,370,744 for the general

Trimble schools ease grad, passing requirements

Final day of school May 15, graduation May 30

BY DAVID CAMPBELL

The Trimble County Board of Education approved several items on Tuesday to help with the school district's response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

In light of Gov. Andy Beshear's order to close all schools through the remainder of the school year, the Board voted to ease requirements for graduating seniors, lower standards for passing grades and set the final day of school for 2019-20 as May 15.

All actions approved were suggested by Trimble County Superintendent of Schools Jessica Wilcoxson and all are effective for this school year only.

As part of his order to close the schools, Beshear allowed schools to count just seven hours a day toward their requirements and schools need only complete a total of 1,062 hours before they can end their instructional days. As a result, Trimble County will officially close schools two weeks early, on May 15. The following week will be for staff workdays with teachers working on a staggered schedule.

Pruett carries on legacy of homegrown talent

CHARLIE ROHLFING
CHARLIE'S BEAT

As regular readers of this column know, Madison is blessed with a wealth of talented and experienced musicians. There's a unique music culture here that perpetuates itself and provides a fertile atmosphere for aspiring musicians to learn and grow.

Leah Jameison-Pruett credits some very familiar names as her inspiration and motivation. Kenny Guthrie, John Walburn, Joey Gayles and Jimmy Davis, to list just a few.

"As a young kid at North Madison Baptist the choir director liked my voice and started me doing solos," Leah explains. "Then in the Eighth grade me and some friends started a band called Kickback. We knew three songs, Eye of the Tiger, I Think We're Alone Now and Angel, by Aerosmith. We would practice at the Odyssey Studio at the bottom of Michigan Road hill. Later I sang the National Anthem a the Shawe games throughout high school.

"But then one day I was just singing to myself out in the yard and Kenny Guthrie happened to be walking by. He stopped and said, hey, I like your voice. You want to sing in a band? That first band was called The Soulful Review and it was Kenny, Rick Fugate and me. That must have been 18 or 19 years ago.

"Of course, that band eventually evolved into The Blues Devils, which was very popular and active all over the region. That lasted about 12 years, and so many of our local musicians got their start with that band. It was a great experience. Kenny and I did a duo act for many years, too, with him playing guitar and me singing.

Musicians Craig Philipp and Leah Pruett are pictured.

"I was never into the blues until I started singing with Kenny. He gave me some CDs to listen to, like Susan Tedeschi, and just loved it. I started getting into Bessie Smith and later recorded her song T'aint Nobody's Business on the Madison Bands Together album. There is nothing like singing a low down blues song.

"When the Blues Devils ended I kinda stopped singing for a bit. But John Walburn encouraged me to learn the guitar and get back out there. I started playing the Thursday Ladies Nights at JoeyGs and did that for about a year until they closed.

"Jimmy Davis started pushing me to do more, even though I was nervous to get out there on my own. But before long I was playing solo at the Taproom, the Broadway, and First Street Saloon. And solo is fun, but there's nothing like playing with a band. I needed that feeling again.

"So I got back with Craig Philipp, he played bass with the Blues Devils, and we started doing some stuff as Leah & Craig. Before long we added Chris Watson on drums, also an old Blues Devils band mate, and we became LCC Live for a while.

But my guitar playing could only take us so far. There were lots of songs we just couldn't do. Which led to us bringing Joe Perkinson into the band. There is no song ever written Joe can't play. Which is where we are today with the band Four Piece Chicken Dinner.

"I like to sing some of the crazy stuff from back in the day, like old Billy Squier songs, and Joe enjoys the variety. We might do Jo Dee Messina, Ronnie Milsap and even Dixie Chicks. Plus we always do a bunch of what I call the standards, the popular songs that audiences really enjoy.

"Looking forward, I just want to stay around Madison and play, I don't want to travel too far. I did plenty of that with the Blues Devils and got it out of my system. Besides, we are building a live music scene right here that's as good as anywhere, you don't need to go anywhere.

"My husband Jim says the sky's the limit for Madison music. He talks about fun ideas like closing off Mulberry Street to traffic on weekend nights and making it a big outdoor music and dining area. There's so much more we can do.

"Finally I just want to mention that my mom, my husband and my daughter have always been my biggest fans. I'm so blessed to have their support over the years."

ON ANOTHER NOTE

I did an article on the Madison Music Movement (M3) on March 12. If that date rings a bell it's because that's when the NCAA canceled March Madness, along with a host of other virus related closures. M3 took a step back, took stock and took a pause, like everything else. But rest assured, it didn't die. As I write this column M3 is once again starting to plan for the future of live music in Madison, including a big star-studded kick-off concert. No date has been set yet, but keep an eye on the M3 Facebook page for developments.

Madison's Collins awarded Fulbright to research in Ecuador

BY ELISABETH MOORE

Studying ways to help learn about mental health and the people around it has been the recent focus of Madison native Scott Collins, who was recently awarded a scholarship that will allow him to delve further into the subject.

Collins, a 2012 graduate of Madison Consolidated High School, is currently studying for his PhD in anthropology at Arizona State University after graduating from Butler University and spending a year as a research assistant at Harvard. With hopes of doing more traveling abroad to conduct research on mental health and finding ways to globally help those who may be suffering from such illness, Collins applied for and received a Fulbright Scholarship that will allow him to do just that.

SCOTT COLLINS

The Fulbright U.S. Scholar Program offers approximately 470 awards for those interested in pursuing projects in teaching, research or a combination of teaching and research. Those who usually apply are college or university faculty administrators, professionals, artists, journalists, scientists, lawyers, independent scholars and many others. Fulbright not only allows people to pursue projects in the United States, but also travel abroad to complete their projects.

Collins said he first considered pursuing the Fulbright during a summer field trip to Ecuador to learn more about the languages spoken by natives there . Collins heard a few of the other students talking about the Fulbright, which got him interested in applying. After applying, he conducted an in-person interview at his college last October that led to his submission being accepted and later approved by the country that he applied for.

Scott Collins said the research project he proposed is to go to Ecuador to study more about mental health across the world while also focusing on researching the differences of mental health across cultures.

Collins said the research project he proposed is to go to Ecuador to study more about mental health across the world while also focusing on researching the differences of mental health across cultures. Collins was accepted into the program last week and said he was glad to be selected even though the project is now on hold due to the worldwide COVID-19 pandemic.

"It's kind of bittersweet because when I applied, none of the current pandemic was happening," Collins said, adding that although the research project is currently on hold due to quarantine, Fulbright will decide when to start the projects when it is safe to travel again.

When the Fulbright Scholarship does begin, Collins said he will receive travel to and from Ecuador and a monthly stipend that will allow him to pay for food, shelter and any other living expenses during his research project. He said that during this project, he mainly hopes to help create tools that will help him and others learn more about mental health, which he said is kind of a blank slate at the moment since not much research has been done on the subject.

After his research is complete, Collins said he is interested in attending Indiana University for medical school and to eventually get a job that will allow him to remain close to family and friends while also being able to travel. He thinks psychology be an interesting career to pursue, but Collins is still open to other options as well.

BUDGET

fund, $1,315,673 for county road aid, $391,285 for the jail fund and $194,700 for local government economic assistance.

Property taxes in the new budget will charge 7.8 cents per $100 assessed value on real property, 7.8 cents on personal property, and 8.8 cents on motor vehicles and watercraft.

The first reading also included rates for the Trimble County Public Library, North Central District Health Department and Cooperative Extension special districts.

For the library, the county will collect 11.8 cents per $100 of real property, 12.91 cents for personal property and 4 cents for both motor vehicles and watercraft.

For the extension service, 4.419 cents will be charged for real property, as well as 5.1023 cents for personal property and 2.21 cents for motor vehicles and water craft.

The health department will collect 4 cents per $100 on personal property, real property, motor vehicles and water craft.

"Just so everybody in the public knows, we do not set these rates. They were set by special districts (the library, health department and extension service), we have no say in what they set these rates at," Magistrate Kenny Green said.

Magistrates can still make changes to the budget before its second reading, which may be held in June instead of May to give more time to consider pay raises and gain a better picture of revenue, Pollock said.

Another concern for the county is the upcoming primary election, which was pushed back to June 23 and may be conducted entirely by mail. Trimble County Clerk Tina Browning said she had been on a conference call with the state and all other 119 counties about the election, but much was still up in the air.

Her biggest concern is the postage cost for each ballot, which would currently cost her office $4 a ballot and overrun her $4,000 annual postage budget by about $1,500 if participation goes as expected.

The county would also have to set up a voting machine in the courthouse for disabled voters to use by appointment only and begin hiring poll workers, Browning said.

Browning said she might be able to request assistance from the state, but she and other county clerks were still waiting on more details. She expects to need four to six poll workers for staffing the voting machine and handling mail ballots, as opposed to the usual 70 for the various precincts, and only spend about $5,280 as opposed to $8,580 on election staffing.

Pollock and magistrates decided they could call a special meeting if needed to reimburse Browning's office for the costs of mailing ballots.

TRIMBLE

"We've been in contact with our parents and we know that fatigue is starting to set in," Wilcoxson said during an online meeting that featured most participants on Zoom from their homes with the public broadcast live on Facebook. "This has not been easy on anybody."

In addition, the state has allowed schools to waive two requirements for graduating seniors, a civics class and the Individual Learning Plan. The state has also lowered the required amount of credit hours needed for graduation to 22, but Trimble County seniors have already reached that total.

The Board also adopted a temporary change to lower the required grade needed in order to pass a class. Previously, any grade lower than 70% was considered not passing, but the Board lowered the standard to 60% for this year only. Any student receiving a 60-69% in a class will be marked as "Passing" with no letter grade assigned. "Passing" grade will not factor into a student's GPA.

"We understand that there is a lot of things going on right now that are out of students' control," Wilcoxson said.

Principals at all three Trimble County schools reported that online interaction between students and teachers has not been well attended due in large part to a lack of technology by local families. Most students are picking up their work in paper packets, and the schools are reporting a 90% participation rate in schoolwork.

Despite the changes to the school calendar and requirements, Trimble County High School has decided to keep its graduation date as Saturday, May 30, and is hopeful to have a graduation plan in place and sent to parents in the coming weeks.

The next Trimble County Board of Education meeting is Tuesday, May 12.

A different love language

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: I am a widow. I have three adult children, two daughters and one son. I am fortunate that my son, "Ryan," and one of my daughters, "Melissa," both live in the same city as me. But I'm writing because I have an ongoing situation with Melissa.

I have severe arthritis, and while I am able to take care of myself, there are times when Ryan and Melissa could do errands that would be really helpful. Ryan is great with this, but Melissa, not so much.

For example, occasionally I have asked her to pick up some things at the grocery for me. (Grocery shopping is difficult with my arthritis because of the lifting involved.) Sometimes she reluctantly agrees; sometimes she makes up excuses as to why she can't go. Even when she does go, she tends to only get half the items on the list.

I have tried to figure out what is going on with her. I asked her had I done anything to offend her. She assured me I had not. I should tell you that Melissa is a strong-willed, rather stubborn person, and she is very opinionated. She is somewhat of a perfectionist, but this has paid off for her: She owns her own business and it has done well.

Today, she was going to be driving by my house, and I asked if she might be willing to stop at a fast-food restaurant to get me something for dinner. She said maybe but wouldn't commit to doing it. Then, when she was headed past my house, she called to see what I wanted her to pick up. I thanked her and told her I had already eaten.

Neither Ryan nor my other daughter act like this. I talked to a few friends to get their opinion and they both suggested I not ask her to do anything for me. Her behavior is causing me to feel uncomfortable when she stops by. What do you suggest? — A Concerned Mother

Dear Concerned Mother: In "The 5 Love Languages," writer Gary Chapman put forth the idea that there are five primary ways for expressing love, and that each of us tends to gravitate toward one of those five. They are: words of affirmation, acts of service, receiving gifts, quality time and physical touch. It seems that you consider acts of service the primary way of conferring love. Your daughter may feel differently, and that's not a personal rejection of you.

That's not to say it's OK for her to blow off your requests for needed help. And when you do really need something from her, you should be direct about how important it is.

"Ask Me Anything: A Year of Advice From Dear Annie" is out now! Annie Lane's debut book — featuring favorite columns on love, friendship, family and etiquette — is available as a paperback and e-book. Visit http://www.creatorspublishing.com for more information. CITY

The solution is reopening businesses and factories shuttered by the shutdown aimed at curbing the spread of the virus. The good news, at least in Madison, is that the number of cases is relatively low and the number of severely ill cases has continued to remain manageable.

In fact, Mayor Bob Courtney said King's Daughters' Hospital would soon announce plans to shift back to a more normal operation where non-emergency and elective procedures can once again be done after weeks of serving only emergent and critically ill patients and standing ready to treat a potential wave of virus patients. He thanked Pence and Congress for including rural hospitals in the recently adopted CARES Act that funds $25 billion for COVID testing, $75 billion for hospitals and $310 Billion into a paycheck protection program for workers to help small businesses and their employees after a previous fund ran out.

Courtney said the support for rural hospitals was especially important to Madison and Jefferson County as well as the 10 counties served by King's Daughters' and that when KDH had to essentially shut down many of its revenue producing procedures to plan and prepare for the COVID-19 emergency, that took away a lot of the facility's revenue stream.

"We would really be decimated in our community without our healthcare provider," Courtney said.

"The good news is your hospital is in better shape than some hospitals in the Sixth District," Pence said. "We had some hospitals that were in a zero cash situation before we started this."

Pence asked city officials where local businesses and industries stood financially at this point in the pandemic. He said the loss of wages impacts tax dollars and loan payments. If a renter does not pay rent, a landlord cannot pay mortgages and property taxes and that impacts cities, counties and the state.

Courtney said closing shops has been difficult on merchants and service providers and the loss of the area's vibrant tourism industry was a huge hit. He said surveys conducted by the local Chamber of Commerce and Main Street program are indicating "two-thirds of local business are holding on and feeling optimistic they will ride this thing out. For one-third it's a matter of two or three months where they will fail without support of the economy coming back to put people to work."

"We're trying to help our small businesses survive," Courtney said. "A third of our businesses are hanging on by their fingernails."

Courtney noted that the city is following Gov. Eric Holcomb closely with hopes that he will reopen some services and businesses if conditions continue to improve and safety precautions are observed.

Pence said while that's a good scenario he cautioned that it could be some time before things return to normal and the parades and festivals Madison is so well known for could be shut down for far longer due to the crowds they draw.

"You're not going to have a parade anytime soon — the Regatta, Chautauqua are things that probably aren't going to come back anytime soon — but still there are many things that can," Pence said.

He also noted that other crowd-intensive facilities will continue to suffer.

"You've got Hanover College that is going to be facing some serious challenges as well. We all know what's happened to businesses, we know what's happened to the hospitals but the universities, the community colleges and private colleges, they are looking at a bleak fall semester if they have it ... I can't imagine why a university would allow the students to come back before we have a cure and then socialize the way college kids do and have 150 or 200 with the virus," Pence said.

In other business, the amendment to the road transfer agreement comes after weeks of negotiations with the Indiana Department of Transportation over what work should be done to State Road 56 prior to the city taking it over as part of the agreement that saw INDOT invest $15.1 million in the new access route to the U.S. 421 bridge. Courtney said INDOT has agreed to some culvert repairs and patching work prior to that transfer later this summer and then support the city's application for federal funding to mill and refinish the entire 4.5-mile route from the east end of the city to State Road 62 at the top of Hanover Hill.

Part of the agreement will also see the city transfer a portion of East First Street to the state in the area around the bridge route.

Once ownership of the route transfers to the city, Courtney said Madison can begin re-envisioning how it wants Main Street to look and function moving forward and begin making those changes as the road is upgraded in future years.

Courtney also noted that April 12-18 was National Public Safety Telecommunicators Week and thanked local 911 dispatchers and operators — "the heroes behind the scene" — who take our calls and send help.

CASES

other businesses not considered essential must remain closed for now.

"From the city perspective, I would just say we are trying to anticipate what the next couple of weeks is going to look like and how to be ready for a reopening if possible, partial reopening — however that's going to look," McGee said. "So we're tying to plan ahead and anticipate what that would look like and how we can be best prepared to do that responsibly and appropriately."

Jefferson County Health Department Administrator Tammy Monroe said the department and county health officer John Hossler were continuing to talk with larger retailers in the county about respecting social distancing in their stores and following state guidelines.

One store, Shoe Sensation, has reopened due to its essential status as a retailer of nurses shoes and work boots, Monroe said. Only two customers are allowed inside at a time and the store is encouraging curbside pickup.

More county residents will have and opportunity to get tested later this week. Monroe said the Indiana Department of Health will conduct drive-through testing at Ivy Tech's Madison campus Thursday through Monday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. The dates are tentative and residents will still need to meet criteria for testing — like exhibiting symptoms of the virus — and the health department will release more information on that soon, Monroe said.

Tuesday was also the group's final Tuesday briefing. Moving forward briefings will be held every Friday due to a slowdown in the demand for information. This Friday's briefing is still scheduled for 10 a.m. and future briefings will continue to follow that schedule, Monroe said.

King's Daughters' Hospital will soon see its testing capacity increase even more with the addition of antibody testing, said Shane Williams, director of EMS and emergency services for KDH. The tests will be provided on a limited basis and cost $75, Williams said.

Unlike normal tests, antibody tests do not check for the virus itself, but look to see if someone's immune system has responded to COVID-19 and helps medical researchers better pinpoint exposure in the community.

"The only thing that this test will show is just that you have the antibodies to the COVID-19," Williams said. "That is all that test will show."

Patients will be able to register for a test at one of the KDH sites and priority is given to first responders and healthcare workers, he said.

The isolation clinic continues to stay busy five days a week and with hours on weekends as demand dictates, Williams said. Most cases in the county have not had to be hospitalized and most are recovering in a matter of two weeks.

Williams also gave an update on the demographic of county residents who tested positive for COVID-19. Fourteen cases were among patients age 41-50, while the 51-60 category has had nine test positive, he said.
